About Me

I am an empirical economist working on applied economics issues: in particular, my interests span the fields of industrial organization, innovation economics and economic impact analysis, as well as transport and health economics. In the case of industrial economics, I have analysed online marketplace platforms, energy markets and I generally assess the impact of related public policies. In the case of innovation economics, my research has dealt with the impact of transport infrastructures (roads, rails and public infrastructures in general) on innovation and patent activity. Moreover, I studied some economic determinant of innovation. Additionally, I have analysed the role played by public R&D institutions – such as the I.I.T. Foundation - on the evolution of local innovation systems. I also analysed the impact of road/rail infrastructure on firms' productivity and real estate markets. In the case of health economics, I studied the predicted impact of the EU zero-emission mobility on local urban pollution and related health outcomes. My research interests generally includes the evaluation of public/economic policies through counterfactual impact evaluation methods.
